

Communications Internship

Where would I be working?

Located one block from the Capitol building, the NPPC Washington Public Policy Center is in the heart of the political action on Capitol Hill. NPPC interns have the opportunity for great professional networking with congressional staff, allied industry trade associations and federal agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and industry professionals.

Who should apply?

Junior or senior undergraduate students or graduate students seeking a degree in fields related to agriculture, animal science, communications, economics, environment, international trade, journalism, nutrition, public policy, veterinary medicine, law, political science, or journalism.

Why should I apply?

This opportunity is designed to provide the participant with hands-on experience agriculture policy experience, writing samples, the ability to complete projects of interest and to develop photography, graphic design, and web site skills under the direction of the highly respected professionals at NPPC.

How do I apply?

Send the below to Courtney Knupp, Intern Program Director at intern@nppc.org:

- Cover letter and resume
- List of 3 references
- Writing sample
- College transcripts (unofficial accepted)

Note interest in spring, fall, or summer.

“ This internship provided a solid foundation for my future career in agricultural communications, exposed me to a variety of agricultural issues, and cultivated lasting relationships in the industry. ”

- Lauren Houska, NPPC Communications Intern, Spring 2016