

International Trade Internship

NATIONAL
PORK
PRODUCERS
COUNCIL

Where would I be working?

Located one block from the Capitol building, the NPPC Washington Public Policy Center is in the heart of the political action on Capitol Hill. NPPC interns have the opportunity for great professional networking with congressional staff, allied industry trade associations and federal agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and industry professionals.

Who should apply?

Junior or senior undergraduate students or graduate students seeking a degree in fields related to agriculture, animal science, communications, economics, environment, international trade, journalism, nutrition, public policy, veterinary medicine, law, political science, or journalism.

Why should I apply?

This opportunity is designed to provide the intern with exposure to the development and execution of U.S. trade policy, interaction with Congress, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative.

How do I apply?

Send the following to Intern Program Director, Courtney Knupp, at intern@nppc.org:

- Cover letter
- Resume
- College transcripts (unofficial accepted)

Please note your interest in spring, fall, or summer programs in your application.

“ NPPC provided me with an internship experience that was challenging and rewarding. I had the opportunity to learn from and work with an experienced trade team on issues that impact our nation's pork producers. ”

- Meghan Orr, NPPC International Trade Intern, Spring 2016
